Born in Milan, where he studied musical composition, he continued his artistic training in Paris. Today his music is performed throughout the world where he develops a protean work for orchestras, ensembles and great soloists, but also for multidisciplinary installations where interactions with the public are central.

He fosters an intimate relationship to his art through the body, making musical writing dance from the skin of a model through what he calls a body score. The idea comes to him after years of reflection sparked by the films "The Pillow Book" by Peter Greenaway and "Five Women Around Utamaro" whose sensuality and the notion of living inspires.

To anchor this relationship with the living, Jacopo Baboni Schilingi writes the sketches of his scores directly on the body of models. He composes a fine-tipped felt on the back, arm, face, legs, chest. A way of literally "incarnating" the gesture of writing in the living, a way of sacralizing his gesture in this instant of writing.

For the artist this living aspect of music is fundamental, even primordial, it firmly anchors in the present time, the very moment when music is thought, composed. It is to have music "in its fibers", "in the body", "in the skin".

In a second stage, after the writing phase was completed, in his studio, which he set up as a shooting studio, he photographed the body of the models covered with the writing of his music in order to fix both memory and gesture.
